LOS ANGELES, Calif. -- Los Angeles City Councilwoman and mayoral candidate Nancy Beaubien announced Tuesday that she has tested positive for coronavirus. Beaubien said she believes she contracted the virus from a healthcare professional in the Los Angeles area. However, she said she has no symptoms and is now in self-isolation. Beaubien is the second city council member in Los Angeles to contract the virus and the first one of the 2020 mayoral race. TUESDAY: Kansas City Council member is latest to test positive for coronavirus Beaubien is the only woman and first Latina mayor in a major U.S. city. She has been mayor pro tem since 2018 and chairs the city council's Public Safety, Public Health and Welfare Committee. Beaubien and the City Council declared a local emergency last week, saying that the city would not oppose issuing rental license-free days for about 30 days. "For now, we have to make sure that we don't use those licenses as they become available," she said. Beaubien said last week she had been to Europe, where she said she had "no contact with any travelers." She said she would cancel her March 6 trip to Australia, which she would previously have used to appeal to New Zealand voters. Beaubien said she wants to take the time she was supposed to travel to Australia to vote instead. "My mother's birthday is coming up," she said. First reported cases in the U.S. On Monday, California became the first state in the country to announce a coronavirus case in the country. A 37-year-old woman who had recently returned from Wuhan, China, tested positive in Riverside County. Also on Monday, a second California resident became infected in the county after traveling from China. The unidentified man is in isolation at a hospital. The two cases are the first reported cases of the virus in the U.S. Meanwhile, tests for people in New York City have
